Respect

Respect is treating a person as if they belong to God. God creates children to be treated with dignity; it releases a sense of honor upon their lives. We honor and respect each other by what we say and do. Our speech and actions should be consistent with God's perspective of us. God's Word tells us that we are conquerors, victorious, blessed, and loved. When we accept what God tells us to be true, we can walk in His original design for our lives.

Many times children are asked to respect others and have not learned to respect themselves. Our treatment of others is largely dependent upon how we see ourselves. Childrearing is so influential because parents, guardians, and teachers are not only building a foundation of how children will perceive themselves, but also cultivating what will be released to others through their lives.

When we make mistakes, God corrects and forgives us instead of condemning us. As we evolve, God celebrates us versus tolerating us. As we grow, God shares us with the world instead of keeping us to Himself. As parents, we can impart respect and honor in our children's lives simply by loving them as God loves us.

Coram Deo,
LaTonia Lambert
